Nation finds its currency being counterfeited, but Cassida 2230 protects retailers from fake dollars

(TUALATIN, OREGON) May 5, 2014 — Recent reports of counterfeit currency showing up across the country this spring have some retailers wondering where to turn to be certain the dollars their customers are handing them are, in fact, legitimate currency.

Enter the Cassida 2230 Counterfeit Detector, which gives cash handlers a fast, easy way to authenticate the currency they're handed is real.

"The Cassida 2230 gives retailers the upper hand against counterfeiters," said Matt Goldfain, product marketing manager for Cassida. "One look at paper currency under the 2230 camera and you'll know whether the bill is real or not."

Cassida's 2230 Counterfeit Detector targets infrared security markings embedded in genuine currency. Infrared marking is the one of the most technologically-advanced security features used on currency today and has yet to be counterfeited.

"Retailers can be confident in the currency they accept when they use the Cassida 2230 to determine authenticity," Goldfain added. "Genuine currency has clearly distinguishable infrared markings that readily appear in the 2230's special frequency camera, leaving no doubt whether the currency is valid or fake."

The Cassida 2230 is available at office supply retailers nationwide. To learn more, go to www.CassidaUSA.com.
